The Battle of Westport took place on October 21-23, 1864. General Sterling Price led 12,000 Confederate cavalrymen into Missouri on September 19th near Doniphan. After sustaining high casualties, Price captured Fort Davidson at Pilot Knob when the Union garrison evacuated the fort. When he failed to capture St. Louis and Jefferson City, Price proceeded to Boonville where he was welcomed and feted by the pro-southern population. From Boonville, the Rebel army advanced toward Kansas and Fort Leavenworth. On the morning of 23 October 1864 General Samuel R. Curtis with 20,000 Kansas State Militia and U.S. Volunteers, comprising the Army of the Border met Price's Army of Missouri in what is now the Loose Park area. Union General Alfred E. Pleasonton, who had been chasing Price across Missouri with 7,000 cavalry, caught up with Price, and by routing Rebel General John S. Marmaduke at Byram's Ford, hit Price's right flank and rear. The defeated Confederates retreated south on the old Military Road. This tour covers the fighting on the 22nd, and 23rd, west of the Big Blue River.
